Embedding Enterprise Risk Management (ERM) into the business strategy is integral to organisations' long-term value preservation and creation. Strategic risk areas need to be systematically identified and holistically assessed on the impact to the organisation and its ecosystem. Against the backdrop of a world marked by volatility, uncertainty, complexity and ambiguity (VUCA), organisations need to elevate the maturity of their ERM programme. And the key driving force is the board. This session is a deep dive into strategic risk areas that warrant attention at the director level and evolved practices to enable ERM.

Course Objectives

1. Understand the evolving expectations of directors, with a view to balance their governance oversight and risk management roles.
2. Identify strategic risk areas that require directors to take on an active role.
3. Explore how strategic risk areas can be mitigated through internal controls.
4. Explore how to drive risk culture in the organisation as a director.
